'He did wrong but he had his whole life in front of him, there are worse people'

Joseph O'Connor, 27, pleaded guilty to a crime known as revenge porn. On the day he was due in court to appeal against a nine-month prison sentence, he was found dead in his bedroom. His family feel the media coverage of his case was too heavy for him to bear, writes

Mick Clifford

€€He never told his side of the story so nobody knew the full details vascess the defendant given for his actions, to Fahr said there was	When Jee O'Connor was found guilty, the judge handed down a sentence of nine months' imprisonment. His solicitor immed an appeal.

	stances, not least the pre- vious incident on Facebook.	"He never told his side of the story so nobody knew the full details," says Kate says.	Grieving a suicide is com- plicated and usually freight- ed with regrets. In this in-	seround? Why, er werts on TV that is it always men imperison between the m sending a photo to a n chat and the unload.	First of its kind	"He knew he did wrong, he was very aware of it, and he was very remorseful. We did	stance, the deceased left not just a note for his level ones but a whole file serving our	ones doing it?" Bredn O'Conn some of the com
f her images by O'Con-	His solicitor immediately lodged an appeal. The case	know he felt so bad; he told us he had been suicidal	his version of the history of what had occurred.	court were unsu

€€ Once it came out in public, he didn't come home, he was afraid to go out, afraid to meet anyone aggrieved with her from the break-up. I felt that there was rumours going around about me